HAI PHONG PORT AREA

Hai Phong is the largest port in North Vietnam, second in population only to Ha Noi, and is important because of its concentration of light industry, warehouses, and transshipment facilities. Most of the North Vietnamese naval vessels are also located in Hai Phong.

The port facilities consist of over 4,200 feet of wharfage accommodating large-hatch, foreign vessels of up to 510 feet in length, several million square feet of warehouse storage, and at least 644,000 square feet of open storage area.

Hai Phong is linked to the rest of North Vietnam by a single-track rail line to Ha Noi, an extensive network of all-weather roads to all parts of north central North Vietnam, and waterway connections with the inland waterways to the southern, eastern, and north central parts of the country.

Shipbuilding and major repair facilities are limited to serving small coastal vessels and the barges and other river craft seen throughout the Hai Phong area. Shipbuilding and or repair yards range in size from Hai Phong Shipyard No. 4 Dancette (Page C5), where large coastal vessels can be built on the marine railways, to the small basin at Vinh Khe (Page C25), where only small river craft and ferry boats can be constructed.

Silting is a major problem throughout this area of North Vietnam; all the navigable waterways near Hai Phong must be kept dredged. An alongside depth of at least thirty feet, at high tide, must be maintained to enable a fully loaded Potava-class (large-hatch, dry cargo) freighter to berth at the Chamber of Commerce Wharves. North Vietnam has several large bucket dredges and numerous Soviet ZRS-1 suction dredges stationed in the area to keep the waterways cleared.
